OUR SONGS AND

WHAT THEY MEAN.

In that admirable little story, Immensee, by the German author, Storm, the writer has Reinhard, the hero, say these words in regard to songs:

"They are not made at all; they grow, they fall from the air, they fly over the land like gossamer, here and there, and are sung in a thousand different places at the same time.
Our several deeds are sorrows we find in these songs; it is as if we all had helped to make them."

If the German author was correct when he said we all help to make the songs of the country, and that our deeds and thoughts are embodied in them, truly, we Americans have given ourselves over to utter abandon, judging from the sentiment expressed in the large majority of the popular songs of today.

In the popular songs, which are to be found upon the pianos of our best people, we generally find some such advice as "huddle us close to your baby, sway me everywhere," or "throw your arms around me honey, hold me tight," or perhaps a description of the most extreme dance, possible to be conceived in the mind of an author pandering to a depraved taste. Some also are highly suggestive and susceptible of an unsavory double meaning, for example, the song "Billy," which has enjoyed extensive popularity.

These conditions are generally familiar, but if not, should be to all parents. But knowledge without action avails nothing.

If, as Storm says, we have helped to make these songs, we ourselves need reforming. That we support them, cannot be denied for the song writers and publishers are anxious to give us what we call for.

What are we going to do about it?

String Band concert at Vermilion & Long's every Saturday afternoon.
